

Soapy Panels Terms of Use

Effective date: July 22, 2026

Status: Draft for owner/legal approval before public release.

1. Scope

These terms describe the official Soapy Panels desktop application and its official Windows Store and Linux Community distributions. Soapy Panels is an offline editor for creating and exporting speech-bubble artwork.

2. Open-source software license

The Soapy Panels software is made available under Apache License 2.0. Your rights to use, copy, modify, create derivative works from, sublicense, and distribute the software are governed by that license. Nothing in these terms reduces the permissions granted by Apache License 2.0.

Third-party components and bundled fonts remain subject to their identified licenses. Those notices are available through Help > Open Source Licenses and in the source repository.

3. Names and branding

Apache License 2.0 does not grant trademark rights. Use of the Soapy Panels name, logos, product icon, and other brand identifiers is governed by the project's trademark policy. You may make accurate statements about the origin of the software and preserve required notices. Modified distributions should not imply official endorsement or support.

4. Windows Store edition

The official Windows Store edition may show bundled promotional images unless an applicable entitlement disables them. It may offer a lifetime remove-ads purchase and a recurring monthly Soapy Plus purchase that enables the features described in the Store listing.

Microsoft processes Store purchases, renewals, cancellations, refunds, taxes, and payment information. Microsoft Store terms govern those transactions. Purchases affect feature availability in the official Windows Store binary; they do not replace or restrict the open-source license for the software.

Availability of Store purchasing and entitlement checks can depend on Microsoft services, the signed-in Store account, device configuration, and network access. Applicable consumer rights remain unaffected.

5. Linux Community edition

The Linux Community edition is fully unlocked, with no advertising or in-application purchases.

6. Your content

You retain rights you already hold in projects, text, images, fonts, stickers, and exports that you create or import. You are responsible for having the rights needed to use and distribute that content. The project does not claim ownership of your content merely because you edit it with Soapy Panels.

7. Acceptable and lawful use

You are responsible for using the software and your exported material in compliance with applicable law and third-party rights. Do not use official project services or communication channels to distribute malware, harass others, or misrepresent an unofficial build as an official one.

8. Offline operation and external services

Soapy Panels does not provide a hosted project-storage, collaboration, telemetry, or automatic-update service in this version. Features you invoke through your operating system or Microsoft Store may be governed by those providers' terms.

9. Warranty and liability

The software is provided under the warranty disclaimer and limitation of liability in Apache License 2.0. Some jurisdictions do not allow particular disclaimers or limitations, so mandatory rights that apply to you are not excluded by these terms.

You are responsible for maintaining backups and checking exports before relying on them. No application can guarantee that every imported font, media file, codec, device, or third-party service will work without interruption.

10. Changes

Official binaries and these terms may change as the application develops. Changes to these terms do not retroactively remove open-source rights already granted under Apache License 2.0 for a copy you received.

11. Contact

Questions about these terms may be sent to Soapy.Panels@outlook.com.